GABRIEL W. GORENSTEIN, UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

The Court's reference at sentencing to the possibility of early termination of probation after a "while" was not meant to suggest that termination would be appropriate when a mere one fifth of the defendant's term of probation had elapsed. Nor was it meant to suggest that it was creating a standard for early termination that differs from what is provided in 18 U.S.C. § 3564(c). As explained at the sentencing, the Court had good reasons for imposing the five-year period of probation. Those reasons remain and the Court expects them to remain until the bulk of the term of probation has been completed. The Court notes that the Probation Department is not seeking early termination and the obligations currently placed on the defendant are not at all onerous. The application for early termination of probation is denied.

SO ORDERED.
